

The great outdoors

Winter may be on its way, but that's not to say you have to banish your summer furniture to the shed. Coco Wolf has launched its own range of British-made bespoke luxury outdoor furniture that is well and truly made to live outside. Elegant and durable, this collection uses the latest technology and hard-wearing materials to withstand the great British weather with quick-dry cushions and high-quality fabrics. And while this range is made to last, it certainly doesn't compromise on style or luxury.

A sterling job

Mount Street has recently welcomed Danish design house Georg Jensen. Renowned for its artistic boldness, the London flagship boutique was designed by interior architect David Thulstrup to create a gallery-like space to show off the entire collection. The opening of the Mayfair store runs alongside the launch of a new collection that sees the Australian designer Marc Newson collaborate with the 111-year-old design house. The result is a stunning sterling silver tea set, each piece of which requires three months of hand hammering. The teapot, coffee pot, creamer and sugar bowl are embellished with responsibly sourced mammoth handles, while the tray is wound in natural rattan – a tea party treat.

FINISHING TOUCH

An appreciation for contemporary classic interiors and beautiful fragrances hasn't failed Lilou et Loïc yet, and its new ideas are no different.

With bath foams, hand washes and candles in a whole host of aromas, the company describes itself as 'a British brand with Scandinavian sensibility' and has created some soothing scents for the festive season. Its Spiced Pomander fragrance is a warm blend of cinnamon and clove – ideal for creating cosy Christmas interiors. (lilouetloic.com)

Wall to wall

Wallpaper doesn't come more attention-grabbing than this offering by Damien Hirst. Showcasing his favourite motif once again, the wallpaper displays a kaleidoscopic view of butterflies.

The style takes inspiration from the obsessive trend for collecting natural history in the Victorian era and creates an almost psychedelic pattern. It's sure to take centre stage in any room.
